Heavy Docket Ahead of Four
Judges Must Wait Till
Trials Are Available

In next three weeks at least there will be no jury trials in the local courts. Information necessitating this abandonment of trials was received Monday by Assignment Judge Albert C. Hunt from the attorney-general's office, which advised the county has no authority at present to contract bills connected with the holding of jury trials.

Fire equipment which responded to the alarm at 8:45 o'clock was practically helpless as the district is outside the city limits and without water. Prompt application of such means as they could use, however, enabled the firemen to save other houses in the neighborhood that were endangered by the blaze.

This situation is entirely the result of the Frisco and Rock Island railroads' contention that the state highway department is responsible for the attorney-general. Until the hearing of this injunction is settled the valuation of these roads determined, no assessments can be made against them for taxes and consequently the county, city and district budgets cannot be approved.

County Assessor F. F. Bowlin and other county officials have been and still are working to devise a plan whereby Tulsa county may be relieved from this embarrassing situation by using the last year valuations of the Frisco railroad in this county as a basis for the tax levy. The Rock Island owns no property here and this county therefore is not concerned in its suit.

On receipt of the attorney-general's advice, Judge Hunt immediately dismissed the jury in his court until October 15.

The only other jury trial in progress now is one hearing the case of Charles Page in Judge Hunt's court. The attorney-general's opinion is that Judge Hunt erred in concluding Monday that this trial will be finished before the case is dismissed. It appears now that it will not be completed before Wednesday.

The same ruling directed to the several courts applies also to county court. County Judge C. L. Holt received similar information from the attorney-general a week ago and at that time abandoned his intention to hold a jury trial.

There are four divisions of the district court in Tulsa county. The judges are Albert C. Hunt, Redmond C. Cole, W. B. Williams and Vallen Biddison.

An unusually heavy criminal docket is ahead for the local courts.
